Volunteers from Goucher College in Maryland tie wood fiber tapes on cypress and water oak seedlings in preparation for planting at Woodlands Trail and Park in Belle Chasse. Kaitlyn Orr said her group has come to the New Orleans area for the past four years during spring break to do restoration work in the community. The planting at Woodlands Trail was organized by Bayou Rebirth, a nonprofit organization that engages volunteers in hands-on wetlands restoration and stewardship projects. Scott Eustis, a graduate student working with Bayou Rebirth, supervised the students, who planted 745 seedlings. For more information, visit www.woodlandstrail.org.
